Layer Styles Layer styles add color or textures to a layer. Layer styles are used in all of the same ways as other elements, but they offer some specialized options not available in other types of editing. The best way to get started with Layer styles is to follow the Photoshop lesson on Saving a Custom Brush Set, discussed in the earlier section. Save a Custom Brush Set. When working with Layer styles, always make sure you are working on a Layer. You will not see any Layer styles in the Layers dialog box, which means there are no Layer styles in the top area. The only way to access Layer styles is by opening the Layer styles dialog box. You can access it in different ways: • When working in the Photoshop workspace, open the dialog box by choosing Layer → New → Layer Style. • By right-clicking directly on a layer that already has Layer styles applied and choosing Layer → New → Layer Style. • By choosing Layer → Layer Style. • By clicking Layer → New → Layer Style from the main menu, or from the Library menu. Some of the options available in the dialog box will only work if you are working on a Layer because they relate to the current layer. You can continue using the layer that has the Layer styles applied to it, and just have the dialog box open. The Layer Styles dialog box has three different pages, each with a different purpose.

A new bilateral UK training agreement has been signed between the UK and Bulgaria which will come into effect later this year, the National Crime Agency and Sofia. The agreement will see Bulgarian law enforcement officers benefit from the UK's counter-terrorism capability by training with the agency. The agreement will enable the NCA to "work together to develop counter-terrorism capability" in Bulgaria, and the agreement will last for five years. The Ministry of Interior, the Bulgarian Security Service and the NCA will work together to bring Bulgarian law enforcement to the UK's counter-terrorism capability. The agreement also enables the NCA to "work together on the transfer of information, intelligence and law enforcement techniques as part of joint counter-terrorism operations". In a joint statement, the NCA and the Bulgarian Ministry of Interior said: "Both countries have a common cause of combating international terrorism and violence, including the spread of extremism and the rise of violent extremism." "Our shared focus on countering these phenomena adds to our ability to provide effective prevention and law enforcement services, including our joint annual operation in Europe known as Operation Takedown." They went on to say that "the increased threat from international terrorism requires close working relationships at all levels of our society and at all levels of government."
